This certificate program is available to current master's and doctoral students in any field of study across the university and to stand alone certificate students who meet the criteria for admission. Using an interdisciplinary approach, students explore the how of gender, sexuality, and other social differences influence the lives of a diversity of communities and cultures both locally and globally. The program provides intensive study of interdisciplinary and intersectional gender and sexuality studies. Courses stress interaction between theory and practice and connections between academic work and public life.
